executed: such as Books, Pamphlets, Circulars, Cards, Handbills, etc., on as good terms as at any other office.

To the friends of Temperance and the public generally we now make our appeal in behalf of this paper. The publisher feeling it a matter of importance to the interest of the Temperance cause in the District, as well as the general interest of the cause, and having been, as he conceives, Providentially placed in a situation at this time when he can mingle this interest with that of the business men, and thereby render a double service to the community, and still further open a medium of communication by which our principles may be extended far and wide, at a cheap rate. He has purchased a printing establishment, so as not only to be able to put a daily paper regularly to press, but also a weekly; and still further, be able to do any other printing the public may be pleased to have done; and he assures them that they shall have no cause of complaint. He has made arrangements by which he can devote his time to the interest of the office and the paper; and, having employed Mr. Charles W.
Fenton, who will be always on the spot, to conduct the printing, he has no doubt but that general satisfaction will be given. We shall make arrangements to have the earliest news; also the proceedings of Congress.

We wish all who are indebted for the paper up to this time to pay up, as the affairs of the tri-weekly must be closed. They will perceive that we are about to give them a better paper, double the number, at the same price.

While the "COLUMBIAN FOUNTAIN" will be devoted to the cause of Temperance, its columns will be enriched by original articles on subjects calculated to interest, instruct, and benefit its readers. It is intended so to blend variety, amusement, and instruction, as that the various tastes of its patrons may be (as far as it is practicable) gratified.
Commerce, Literature, and Science, and every other subject of interest, not inconsistent with Temperance and morality, will receive the earnest attention of the publishers.
Nothing of a sectarian, political, or personal character will be admitted.

A CARD.

THE subscriber begs leave to say to members of Congress and others, that he has several good rooms which he will let on accommodating terms, either furnished or unfurnished, located on the South side of Pennsylvania avenue, between 9th and 10th streets, and equidistant between the Capitol and the public offices. I have also two of the best cellars in the city, which I will rent in part or the whole, or receive goods on storage.
This is a good opportunity for butchers or market people.
L. S. BECK.

JUST FROM THE MINT!!!

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.
S. BECK & SON, would take this method of notifying the citizens of Washington

MISCELLANEOUS.

MARGARET GREEN, OR THE DRUNKARD'S DAUGHTER.

BY WILLIAM R. LINDSAY.

"Oh, James, I am happy to see you. It is a long time since we parted. We were then sophomores at the Getesburg Institution. I hope, however, with your permission, that we may once more resume the friendly standing which then existed between us. What say you, James?"

"Harry, I need not tell you, that I esteem you—yes, esteem you both for your mental and philosophical endowments. They are rare, and command my friendship—but—"

"But, what, my friend?"

"Why, to be plain with you, the tenor of your last letter goes far to convince me that there is no change wrought in your principles. Even those very faults, which I have so often taken occasion to point out to you as pernicious and dangerous to your fellow beings, as well as to yourself;—to these, Harry, you seem the more tenaciously to cling. I revere the man—but, permit me to say, I despise the sentiments!"

"Tush! James! You do not wish me to become all at once an ill-tempered and morose anchorite; full of wise sayings, and old saws—replete with morality and Christian reflections? No, no—my element is the world, and out of it, I would be like the poor minnows dragged to the rays of the noon-day sun. But, a truce to this bandying of moral ethics at the present time.
To-night I expect to meet you at our joint friends Cartell's, who gives a party in honor of his natal day. You'll certainly attend?"

"I will! provided my sweet partner does not say me nay."

"Ah! ah! And pray, my young Apollo, who is this Venus de Medicis, who holds so great an influence on your stubborn heart. I venture to assert, that it is some fair being, worthy the caresses of a conqueror!"

"To that, yes! She is worthy of the highest elevation to which woman can aspire. Yet, by many, she is scorned and mocked for the crimes of another. It is no less a personage than Margaret Green!"

"What, old Green, the Drunkard's daughter? Ha, ha, ha! Well that's a good one. Why, my dear fellow, do you, for a moment suppose that Cartell will permit you to introduce such a being into 'genteel society'?"

"If she is not admitted, let me assure you, he admits not James Gordon!" replied the youth, as the crimson of honest indignation suffused his manly cheek, "and as for the 'genteel society' of which you speak, permit me to ask, of what ingredients is it composed? Is it of virtue, honor, and humanity? No, but their direct antipodes.
Who is Cartell? and who are they who hover round his wealth as the dull and slothful moth round the midnight lamp? Compare them with Margaret Green in the scale of virtue, integrity, and goodness of heart, and I blush at the comparison. Is it not the wealth of Cartell, and his satellites that constitutes true gentility—but it is the heart and the acts of virtue prompted thereby."

"But she is a Drunkard's daughter!"

"And what hideous crime is that? If her parent has fallen under the baneful influence of alcohol, how can the blame attach itself to his child? And now, Harry, permit me to ask you a few questions. Whether is the poor victim of rum, (who is more an object of pity than contempt,) or he, who under false pretences and glittering allurements drags that victim to a sacrifice of both soul and property, the most to be despised on earth, and culpable in the sight of heaven? Margaret Green is a drunkard's daughter—you a rich man's son; the son of the Landlord of the Alhambra, who has, for many years derived from the City Council a license to—I will not say what; and it is the property of Jonas Green, which has swelled the coffers of your household.
The ruin was held before him—the allurements of vice were clad in friendship's garb, and now that his wealth is gone—his body prostrated—his god like attributes cast aside —and the ghost of his murdered soul knocks with a heavy hand at the door of remaining humanity—he is despised and spit upon, and his daughter denied the rights, which her superiority of intellect, and goodness of heart would lead her under other circumstances, to look upon with contempt. Who is to blame? Let your own conscience draw the inference, and I sincerely hope you may treasure it up in your heart, and appreciate it accordingly. Good morning Harry—and remember this—that James Gordon would rather die in poverty, coupled with virtue; than live a life of luxury, and affluence, where the price of its acquisition is the murder of body and soul!—yes, under the license of City Fathers, who must stand accountable for the crime at the great day of reckoning."

"Why, by the mass, you preach well, James. But be it as you will. To-night we meet at Cartell's. Remember your promise."

"I will! And to night, too, will the triumph of virtue over the arrogance of wealth, be fully displayed, in a proud comparison of Margaret Green, and those who now despise her. Your 'genteel society,' Harry, I fear, will be lowered in estimation, and the gay apparel, and affected mincing and nonsensical rhodomantade, give way before the lofty sentiments of virtue, and the bright glance of Margaret Green. I tremble for the issue. Good morning."

The above dialogue with which we have seen fit to open this sketch to the reader was conducted between two youths, who resided in the same village, and who had graduated at the same Institution of learning. James Gordon was the son of a respectable clergyman, who, though he possessed a sufficient quantity of wealth, to entitle him and his family to the respect generally heaped upon this evil and blind god by the world; yet taught, and imbibed into the hearts of his children sentiments of virtue and religion. To them he taught a proper respect for all men—a due appreciation of the good—and a cordial hatred for vice and its concomitants. No matter whether virtue appeared in the gaudy tinsel of the court, or in the homely and tattered garb of the beggar, to his children, this pious father had given the lessons of clarity, love, and respect. Upon the wealth of the world, they were taught to look, as upon the great and powerful demon which alienated the heart and its loftiest aspirations, and dearest affections from family, kindred, and friends—as also from the Almighty God.
Upon the other hand they were taught to despise and eschew the evil, no matter in what shape, or under what garb it presented itself. Whether it was the lowly artisan or the powerful ruler of state, who was the medium through which it approached, both alike were condemned, and both alike met with the just abhorrence which inspires virtue, when it comes in contact with vice. Money, the powerful god of vice—that which blinds justice, degrades the poor, and sacrifices God to mammon was looked upon as the greatest of evils—and used by them only where good was to be the result.
They felt, with a golden key, they could unlock the secret channels of the heart—throw a veil over the eyes of humanity, and wring to the core, the hearts of the suffering poor—that they could corrupt the church and stay the proceedings of the bar —could prompt the passage of heinous and immoral and inhuman licences by the council of the city and the nation—open wide the doors of crime and murder, and they abhorred it as they would the features of the king of darkness. They looked to God, and to Him alone for support, and correct principles; and avoiding the haunts of vice, sought the paths of rectitude and righteou-ness. Such were the principles which inspired James Gordon—and such the principles he would fain have inculcated into the bosom of his young associate.

Harry Bertram, was directly the opposite of his young friend. Gay and thoughtless, he rushed heedlessly into all gradcs of crime and dissipation. His father was a rumseller, who, by close attention to his accursed traffic, had amassed a considerable property, and who was looked upon by his fellow villagers, notwithstanding the base and damning means he was known to have pursued in the acquisition of his property, and the daily course of drinking and gambling which he assiduously carried out, as a respectable and honorable citizen. From this man, Harry had imbibed a thorough course of lessons in all that characterizes a dangerous member of community. He despised poverty in every shape, no matter what might have been its cause; but when drunkenness was attached to it, his disgust became almost insupportable. Wretched, infatuated mortal! In denouncing the drunkard and his family as the accursed of God, and the despised of man, he did not for a moment think that those he was then denouncing were the victims of his own parent—he did not stop to think that the wealth he was enabled to lavish upon a life of splendid misery, was wrenched from the mouths of weeping mothers and starving children—and that as he pronounced them the accursed of Heaven, his own parent, their destroyer, stood before God in the double light of a robber and a murderer—a murderer of both body and soul! Such an idea never entered his mind, and reckless of consequences, he rushed heedlessly on to his ruin. But an hour was before him—one fraught with intense pain, and helpless remorse—one in which the images of his youth would be fearfully recalled, and groaning out an existence of loathsome degradation, meet the Judge of Holiness steeped in crime and infamy. But I will not anticipate, suffice it to say, that where wealth, or the results and effects of wealth were to be found, there would be seen Harry Bertram, in all the pride of ill-gotten wealth.

But there is another character connected with this brief sketch, which merits a passing notice, from my hands; but I will not detain the reader long in drawing the portrait of one, doubly armed with innocence and virtue—it is the portrait of Margaret Green, the Drunkard's Daughter.

TO BE CONTINUED.

THE DRUNKARD'S WILL.—I leave to society a ruined character, a wretched example, and a memory that will soon rot.

I leave to my parents, during the rest of their lives, as much as sorrow and humanity, in a feeble and desperate state, can sus-tain.

I leave to my brother and sister as much mortification and injury as I could well bring on them.

I leave to my wife a broken heart, a life of wretchedness, a shame to weep over them, and a premature death.

I give and bequeath to each of my children poverty, ignorance, a low character, and remembrance that their father was a drunkard."

A Western editor excuses his lack of editorial by saying that his "better half" compels him to stay at home and tend the "little one," while she is around among the neighbors showing her new calico dress!

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT

follows: Commercial Legislation; Commercial History and Geography; Mercantile Biography; Descriptive, Statistical and Historical Accounts of the various commodities which form the subject of Mercantile transactions; Port Charges; Tariffs; Customs and Excise Regulations; Commercial Statistics of the United States and the different countries of the world, with which we have intercourse, including their Physical Character, Population, Productions, Exports, Imports, Seaports, Monies, Weights, Measures, Finance and Banking Associations, and Enterprises connected with Commerce, embracing Fisheries, Incorporated Companies, Railroads, Canals, Steamboats, Docks, Post Offices, &c.; Principles of Commerce, Finance and Banking, with Practical and Historical Details and Illustrations; Commercial Law, and Mercantile Law Reports and Decisions of Courts in the United States and Europe, including Insurance, Partnership, Principal and Agent, Bills of Exchange, Sale, Guaranty, Bankruptcy, Shipping and Navigation, &c., and whatever else shall tend to develop the resources of the country and the world, and illustrate the various topics bearing upon Commerce and Commercial Literature.

It has been, and will continue to be, the aim of the Editor and Proprietor of the Merchants' Magazine, to avoid everything of a party, political, or sectional bias or bearing, in the conduct of the work—opening its pages to the free and fair discussion of antagonistic doctrines connected with the great interests of Commerce, Agriculture, Manufactures and the Currency.

Complete sets of the Merchants' Magazine, embracing 12 semi-annual volumes, of about 600 large octavo pages each, bringing it down to June, 1844, inclusive, may be obtained at the Publisher's Office, 142 Fulton street, New York, at the subscription price.

Publishers of newspapers in the United States, by giving this advertisement two or three insertions and remitting Two Dollars to the Proprietor, will be entitled to the Magazine for one year.
